tougher than before, with something to share

i am the seafarer

ate a coddled egg, fixed fresh cooked stirred hot in porcelain witness two in love, making hopes real coming from need and despair faith being where you and I meet or refuse to meet

big Sleep

of young photogene

post-structure, vague of rhyme professor wrinkled nose

my parents, just a half-day drive away somehow no closer then than Polaris itself their home and dorm illuminated after sunset and returning it to its jar

as the writer Philip K. Dick suggests,

"Things Are Not Always As They Seem

love, happiness, intimacy the drowned sailer

cannot be revived acknowledge the reef where the waves pulled him in walk by, head on

i am the seafarer

on seas of information

were nightly features

oh, and to study, my connection

as the writer Philip K. Dick suggests,

where coffee, dancing, women

as the writer Philip K. Dick suggests,

remember our song,

the lyrics:

where child of parents, farm-hand moved to city, merged with populace a sweet sadness swelled the poet, born with double hernia awkward, big-eared, sensitive
